

Name: Domenico

Age: 22 years

He's at the end of his university career, in the mechanical engineering course and he's now looking for a job.

• in a scale from 1 to 10, where 1 is no knowledge and 10 is expert level, what is your level of knowledge on how to write a curriculum?

His level is 5 because he knows the layout he can use, what he should put and where, he knows the form (impostazioni)

• in a scale from 1 to 10, where 1 is no knowledge and 10 is expert level, what is your level of knowledge on how to perform a job interview

His knowledge is between 4 and 3 because he's never done a simulation, so the equivalence he does is to an exam, but he's not sure it's like it works

• in a scale from 1 to 10, where 1 is no knowledge and 10 is expert level, what is your level of knowledge on how to find the right job for you?

His knowledge is payout 4 or 5 because he doesn't really know to whom he can ask for information, if he can contact someone

• in which way are you approaching/did you approach to find a job?

thanks to university with career days

• if you use/used jobs platforms, how often and what for? if not, what are other methods you are using/used for learning about the working world?

he use LinkedIn but not so often because he doesn't know it very well to use it right. Indeed he use it just to find job applications and to be known

• what do you do to find an available position related to your cv?

he look for companies that are looking for his role and send them his cv

• what do you do to prepare for a job interview?

he reads up on the company and reviews what he's studied at the university

• what do you do to prepare your curriculum?

he tries to refer to his thesis that is writing, presenting it in his letter of presentation

• have you ever received a feedback on your CV? By whom? Saying what?

the only people that give him some feedback are a university colleague and his dad. They told him that his cv was empty and he had to put more info related himself and old jobs he did, adding also soft skills

• regarding the methods you are using/used for learning about the working world, what do you find useful and what less useful?

he founded usefulness career days organized by university and school

• in a scale from 1 to 10, where 1 is too difficult and 10 is super easy, how difficult have you found using these methods?

Can you explain why?

Can you explain why?

8 because it's not difficult to access to events (career days) or LinkedIn if you are in the university environment.

Compared to LinkedIn, in university events is easier to be known by or to know companies

• what do you think are the advantages and the disadvantages of using them?

advantages: career days - to know companies and managers (responsabili) in person. They can give you feedback

LinkedIn - it connects you very easily

Disadvantages: career days - companies mostly look for internships

LinkedIn - aseptic, you don't have a real contact with people

• can you tell us one event when you have some issues with them and another when they helped you, if any?

in career days companies give more attention to the candidates they are looking for instead of pay attention to students that would like to give to that company a try.

As a positive aspect, companies are open to explain their structure, their company

• how have these methods ever helped you on learning how to write a curriculum?

let companies reading his cv has helped him to know how to write it better

- how have these methods ever helped you on learning how to perform a job interview?

no because in career days the "interview " is not a job interview, it's just to get some information. He learned doing real job

interviews

- how have these methods ever helped you on learning how to find the right job for you?

I didn't get the answer

- [in a scale from 1 to 10 where ..]how much these methods had an impact on learning how to write a perfect cv and to perform a job interview? why?

7 but I didn't get why

- how much [do you think] learning how to write a perfect cv and how to perform a job interview have an impact on finding the right job?

Its impact is 9 I didn't get why
